The Fourth Hallym Model United Nations (HLMUN) held its delegate orientation to introduce delegates' responsibilities, outline the conference schedule, and select the official agenda and participating countries, marking the start of preparations for the conference.

Secretary-General Jang Jin-won, who led the session, explained that delegates represent UN member states, advocate for their national interests, and negotiate solutions to international challenges. He emphasized that delegates should base their statements on their assigned country's official position and national interests rather than their personal views. He also outlined the key stages of the conference, including proposing practical and specific solutions, forming coalitions with other countries, drafting resolutions, and voting to reach a final agreement.

Following the introduction, the ten participating teams discussed and voted on three proposed agenda topics: establishing conditions for international seabed mineral exploitation and standards for environmental responsibility; international assistance and the sharing of costs and responsibilities for post-conflict peacebuilding and economic recovery; and cooperation on the supply of essential medicines and vaccines and the transfer of production technologies to developing countries.

In the first round of voting, the first and second proposals each received four votes, while the third received two. A runoff was then held between the two tied proposals. With six votes to the first proposal's four, "International Assistance and the Sharing of Costs and Responsibilities for Post-Conflict Peacebuilding and Economic Recovery" was adopted as the official agenda for the Fourth HLMUN. Delegates will explore how the international community can support countries emerging from conflict and share responsibility for lasting peace and economic reconstruction.

After selecting the agenda, the teams chose the countries they would represent. A draw determined the order of selection, and each team discussed its preferences before making its choice. Team 1 selected Japan; Team 2, Sweden; Team 3, the Netherlands; Team 4, Germany; Team 5, Morocco; Team 6, Rwanda; Team 7, Brazil; Team 8, Liberia; Team 9, Colombia; and Team 10, Iraq.

The session continued with guidance on preparing and submitting the first position papers. Each team will research its country's position on the agenda and the factors shaping that position, then submit a Korean-language position paper by October 5. The papers should be two to three pages long, follow an introduction-body-conclusion structure, and use language appropriate for the UN General Assembly. A member of the Education Support Team will be assigned to each delegation to provide feedback and assist with preparations.

Delegates will present their initial position papers at the first informal meeting on October 7. A total of four informal meetings will be held through November 11, allowing delegates to discuss their countries' positions, form coalitions, and draft resolutions. At the formal conference, each delegation will deliver its position statement in English within a two-minute time limit, while the overall proceedings will be conducted in Korean.

The Fourth HLMUN formal conference is scheduled for Wednesday, November 18, at the International Conference Hall. Building on the orientation, delegates will examine national interests and engage in negotiations to develop shared approaches to post-conflict peacebuilding and economic recovery.
