Hallym Model United Nations (HLMUN) held a special lecture for its delegates ahead of upcoming meetings and the official General Assembly. The lecture was organized to help participants understand the role of resolutions and how to draft them, and to explore practical solutions to international issues based on the positions of their assigned countries.

The lecture covered the basic concepts and drafting process of resolutions, which outline solutions to agenda items and directions for collective responses by the international community. Delegates examined the process of organizing country-specific proposals into resolutions, comparing different drafts, and building consensus through clause-by-clause discussions and revisions. Through this, they gained an understanding of the role of delegates in moving beyond presenting national positions to developing common solutions through negotiations with other countries.

In interviews conducted after the lecture, Iraq delegates Hwang Ye-na and Shin Yeon-seo stated that the lecture helped them better understand the agenda and establish a direction for drafting resolutions. Both participants explained that the explanations of the agenda helped them understand how to structure the basic framework of their upcoming resolutions and develop solutions. They also stated that they were able to gain a more concrete understanding of topics they had previously found difficult.

Regarding their future activities, the two participants expressed their determination to actively participate in the schedule prepared by the Secretariat and continue their preparations, as this is their first time participating. In particular, they expressed their commitment to deepening their understanding of Iraq and making efforts to faithfully represent the position of their assigned country.

The lecture served as a preparatory process for delegates to develop country-specific positions into actionable proposals and reach common solutions through negotiations. Based on what they learned during the lecture, delegates will review their countries' positions and relevant materials and continue drafting resolutions and engaging in clause-by-clause discussions during upcoming meetings.
